Kerloch Oil Tools Joins Chamber

Kerloch Oil Tools has become one of the latest members of north-east Scotland's largest business to business networking organisation.

The Aberdeen-based oil and gas service company has joined Aberdeen and Grampian Chamber of Commerce, which represents more than 1,300 businesses in the region. Membership of the organisation will provide the firm, which specialises in premium threading and the repair and manufacture of oilfield country tubular goods (OCTG), with access to a range of business networking events, training courses and market intelligence.

Commerce

The chamber's membership is drawn from businesses of all sizes operating across a range of sectors. It works at a local, national and international level to support these members and has been doing so since 1877. In 2014, the chamber was named 'UK Chamber of the Year' by the British Chamber of Commerce in recognition of the support it provides to members.

The organisation aims to be the voice of business across the region, lobbying on behalf of members for a better operating environment.

Kerloch Oil Tools business support manager Paula Geraghty said: "Becoming a member of Aberdeen and Grampian Chamber of Commerce will provide Kerloch Oil Tools with access to a range of important services.

"We have worked hard over the last 18 months to grow and develop our business, securing a range of new licenses which has increased our capabilities and strengthened our offering. Being part of the chamber will afford us with additional platforms to promote our business and service offering to a wider audience."
